

Library Rules

Social Story

Going to the library can be a fun experience. However, it is important to remember that there are some rules to follow when visiting the library. If you follow these simple rules, it will ensure everyone has a good visit.

Running inside a library can be dangerous. It is better to walk inside the library and hold the railing when going up and down stairs.

One of the most important rules is that I use my quiet voice when inside a library. Using a quiet voice means whispering or talking at a low volume. The reason I use my quiet voice is because other people might be reading or studying, and they need a quiet place to do that.

There are other things I can do to ensure the library is a quiet place for all to visit. For instance, if I want to listen to music or watch a video, then I should use headphones. Some visitors bring their own headphones to use, just in case they experience sensory overload. This is perfectly fine to do.

If I follow the rules, this will ensure everyone has a safe and enjoyable visit to the library.
