The Author, Priscilla L. Dingle is a Native of Jacksonville, Florida but has resided in Jacksonville, North Carolina for nearly 25 years. She is a Graduate of Florida A&M University where she received her Bachelor of Science Degree in Business Management and a MS. Degree in Public Administration. Presently she is a student at Walden University where she received a 2nd MS. Degree in Educational Leadership and Administration. Currently, she is a PhD Doctoral Candidate at Walden University preparing for her dissertation.

Her professional career outside of academia includes experience as a Partnership Specialist for the Department of Commerce US Census Bureau. This position allows her to travel throughout several counties in NC planning, developing and coordinating partnership agreements to ensure activities at all levels are carried out in these counties. As an Educator, her goal is to also ensure children are represented in the Decennial. She understands not only the importance of children learning at an early age, but that they should be counted and considered in every area of our lives. As we prepare for the 2020 Census in the State of North Carolina, we acknowledge the need to ensure all kids within the 0-5 age group should be counted in the upcoming Decennial. Not only are we confident that we can, this coloring book was created with that age group in mind to teach them the important role they play. With this focus, she is committed to preparing each county for the 2020 Census so that everyone is counted once for accurate representation.

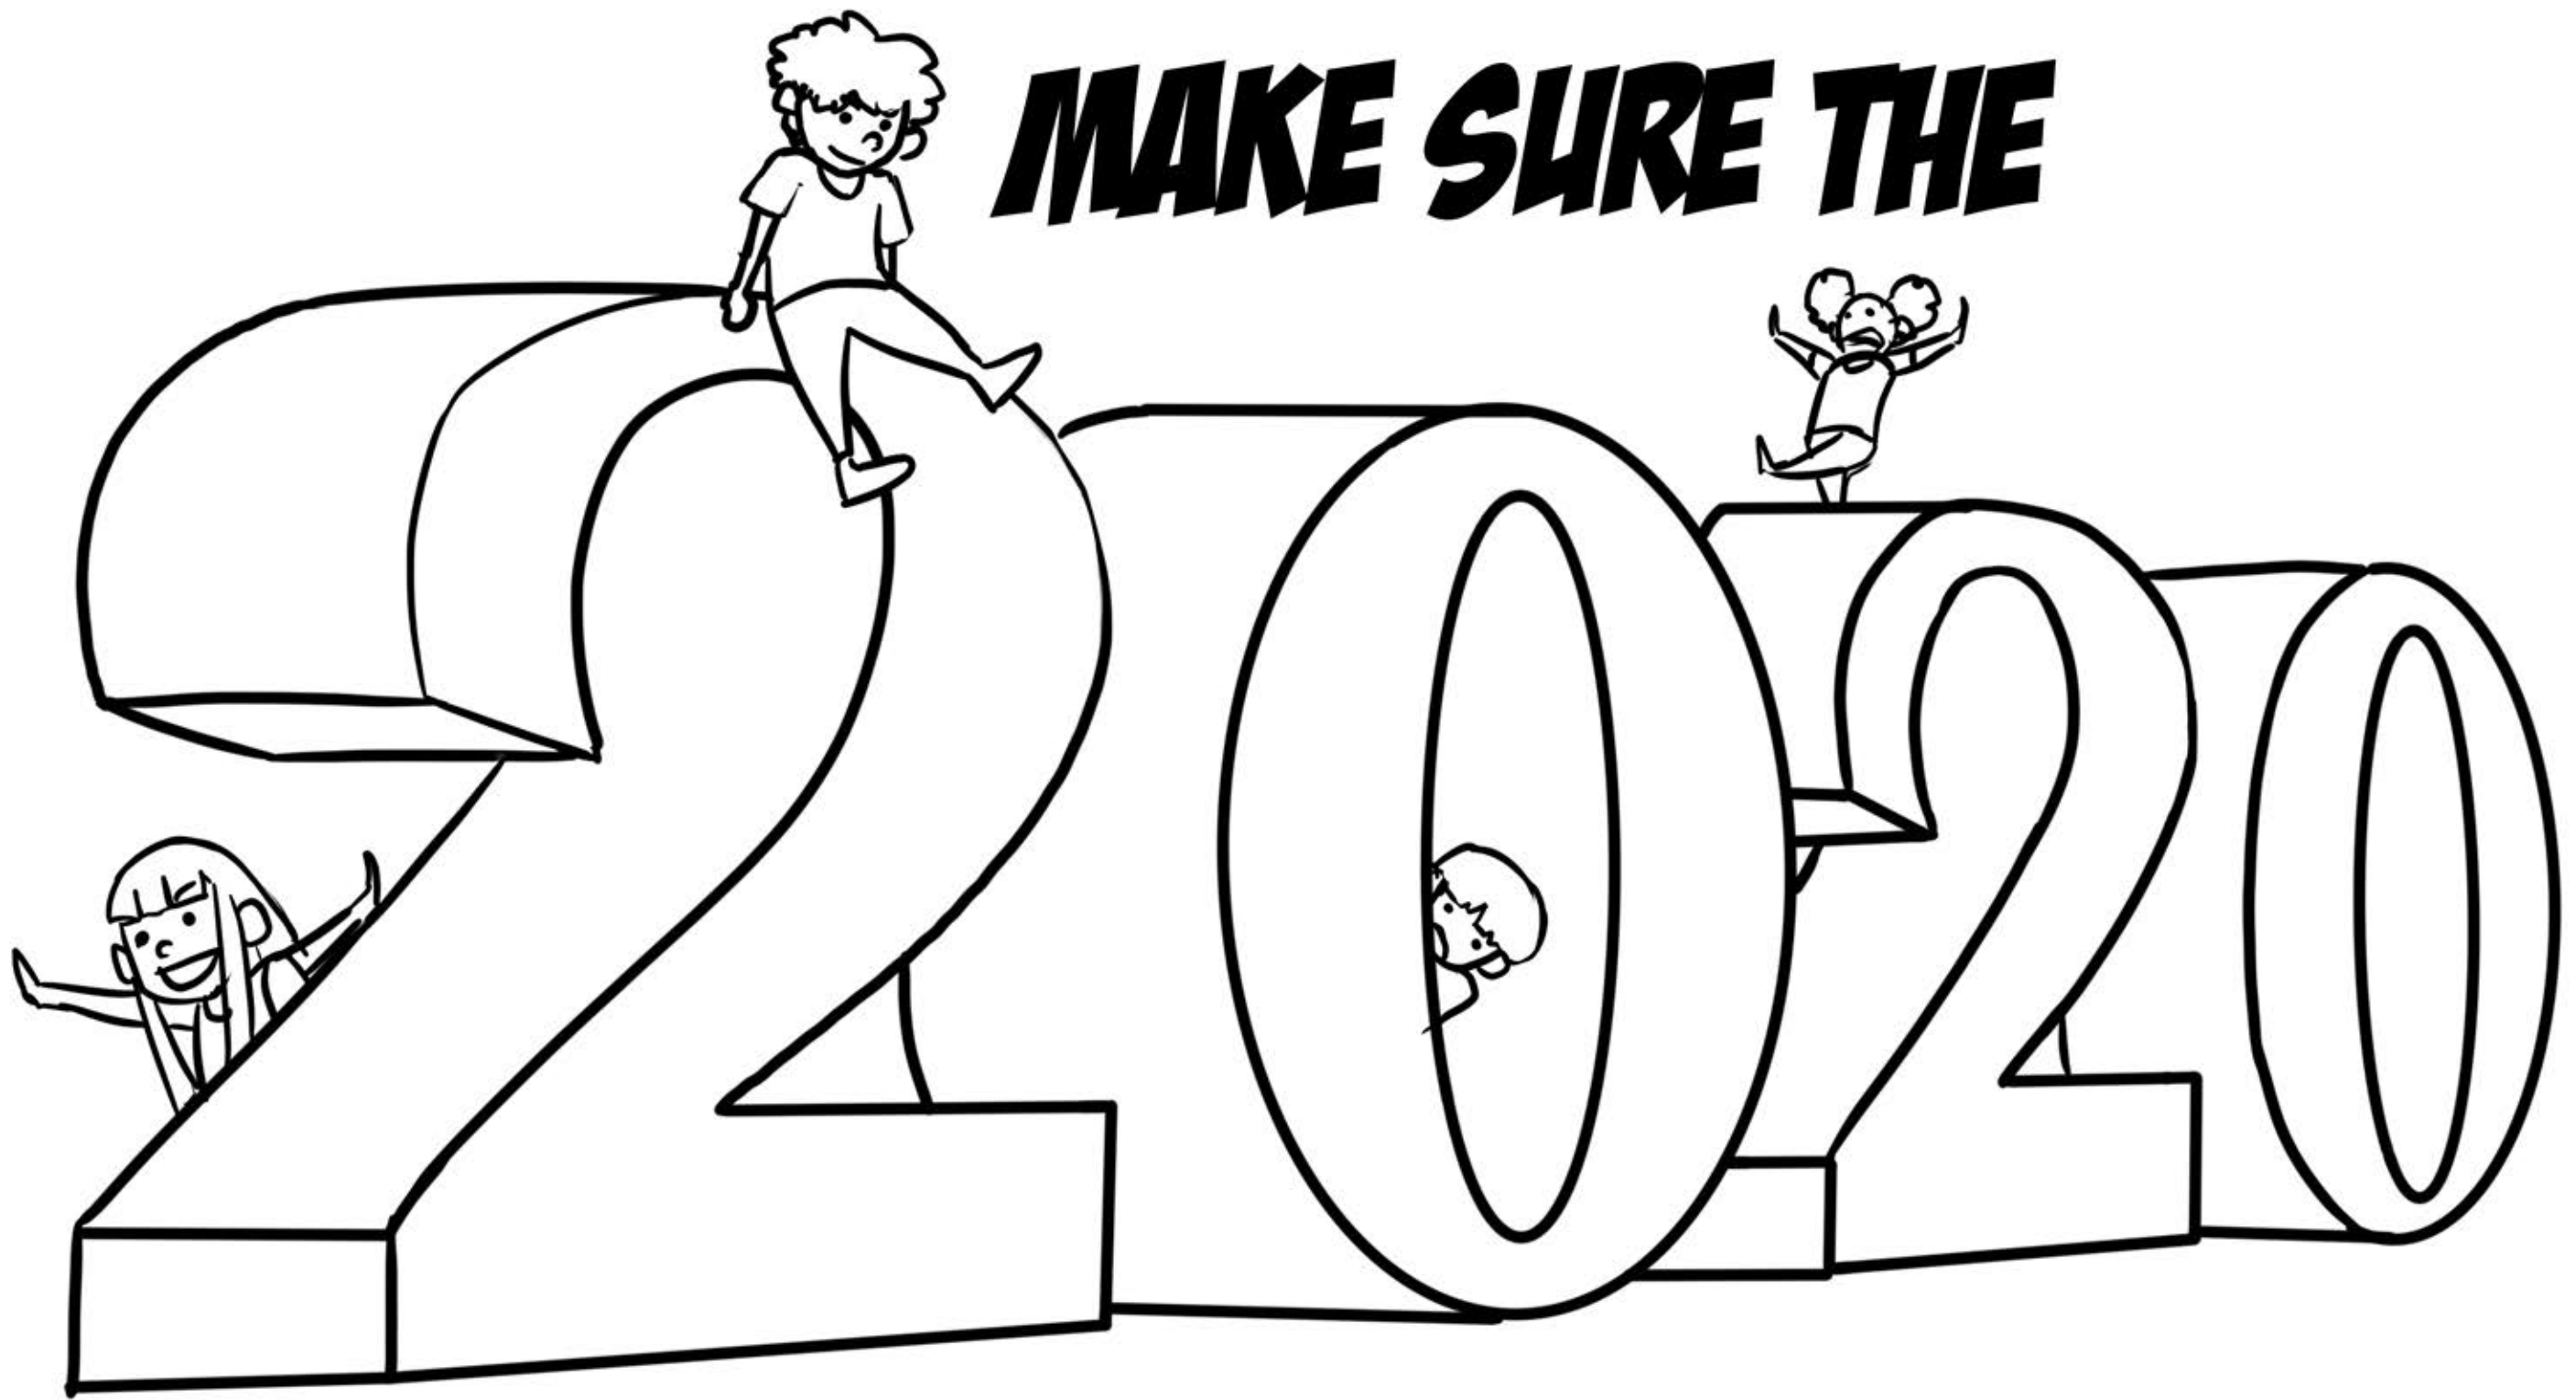

The Illustrator Mikhail Sebastian, is the son of Priscilla. He's a Graduate of Savannah College of Arts and Design (SCAD) in Savannah, Georgia.
